

PRESS RELEASE

For immediate release – November 16, 2009

Community demands release of videotape of in-custody death

Representatives of a leading aboriginal and civil society group, along with a forensic pathologist and a journalist gathered yesterday to demand the release of security footage taken in an RCMP lockup that shows the Taser-related death of Clayton Alvin Willey, an aboriginal man.

Willey was arrested in 2003 for creating a public disturbance in Prince George, British Columbia, and died that same day following his interaction with police with a head injury and multiple broken ribs. RCMP officials acknowledge he was repeatedly Tasered while hog tied at the Prince George RCMP detachment.

Security camera footage from the jail of the incident was edited by the RCMP, and the RCMP retains a copy of the edited footage. Representatives of the UBCIC and BCCLA, along with Dr. John Butt and Leonard Cler-Cunningham, the independent journalist who uncovered the existence of the video, have viewed the edited footage.

“Even the edited footage shows Mr. Willey hog tied and being dragged around the Prince George RCMP detachment and being Tasered while lying helpless on his stomach,” said Grand Chief Stewart Phillip of Union of BC Indian Chiefs. “If you treated any animal the way Mr. Willey was treated, there is little doubt that you would be facing criminal cruelty charges. Astonishingly, the officers involved here are still on active duty.”

The original footage may be lost, or may be in the custody of the RCMP or Coroner’s Office. Both offices have refused to release the edited or the full video to the public citing privacy concerns, despite receiving a notarized release from Clayton Willey’s family.

“This video must get out to the public, in the same way that the Dziekanski video was released, so that there can be some justice for Clayton Alvin Willey,” said David Eby, Executive Director of the BCCLA.

Who was involved in this incident?

In January, 2009, two of the RCMP officers involved in the Willey case were found by Provincial Court Judge Micheal Brecknell to have taken deliberate steps to ensure the loss of Prince George detachment videotape of another Taser abuse allegation. RCMP will not confirm whether those officers are still on active duty, but media reports indicate that investigative action was taken by the RCMP into that finding.

What is the content of the video?

- There are no date or time codes in the edited videotape.
- The video shows an RCMP SUV arriving at the Prince George Detachment garage.
- The video cuts away before RCMP say Clayton is pulled, hog tied, from the back seat of the SUV and allowed to drop, full weight, on his chest and possibly on his face.
- Clayton is then dragged down a hallway, with his hands bound behind his back and tethered to his feet, into an elevator. His head hits the doorway on his way into the elevator and he does not register any response.
- In the elevator, an RCMP officer can be seen targeting his Taser on Clayton's back and kneeling down and applying the device to Clayton's back.
- Clayton is then dragged out of the elevator into the booking area of the detachment. A number of RCMP officers, including senior officers are seen observing while the two male officers handling Mr. Willey Taser him at least twice more.
- Mr. Willey appears to lose consciousness, and an ambulance attends the scene.
- The RCMP advise that ambulance attendants ask the officers present to loosen Mr. Willey's handcuffs because his hands are "black". The video shows officers loosening his handcuffs.
- Still hog tied, Mr. Willey is loaded onto the stretcher, wrapped in blankets, and taken to the local hospital.
- He has a massive heart attack en route to the hospital and dies, which is not shown on the video.

What is the video?

The video reviewed by the representatives at the press conference is an edited compilation of the surveillance videotape taken at the RCMP Prince George detachment. It, and possibly the full, unedited footage, is in the possession of the RCMP and the B.C. Coroners Service.

What were the consequences of these actions?

The RCMP investigation found that all interactions with Mr. Willey were “routine” and there was no discipline as a result.
